UNDERSTANDING DRUG ABUSE

a health column from the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration
U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare

Cocaine: 1977

So exhilarating are the effects of cocaine that people who try the drug often experience a strong urge to use it again and again.

Death from cocaine, although rare and unpredictable, can occur from "snorting" (inhaling) as well as from injection. Cocaine, although not physically addicting, can cause psychological dependence.

So states Cocaine: 1977, a major research report recently released by the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

"One of the most notable aspects of our knowledge is that so much is not yet known," Dr. Robert DuPont, NIDA Director, says in a foreword to the report. "We are still, to a large extent, ignorant of the actual and potential hazards posed by this fascinating substance, even though it was used by about two million Americans this past year."

NIDA estimates that almost eight million Americans have tried cocaine at least once and that approximately one million have used it in the past month.

"While the evidence accumulated thus far does not justify the claim that the American public is now suffering greatly as a consequence of cocaine use, it is evident that much more needs to be known before any actions are taken that might result in its wider availability' at lower cost. The relatively benign picture presented by occasional use of small quantities might be markedly altered were the single euphoric illicit dose now costing about $10 to become available at the licit cost of about 10¢," Du-Pont warned.

Cocaine, usually sold in powder form, is the principal active ingredient in the coca plant, a shrub grown in the Andes mountains of South America and dating back to at least 500 B.C. Cocaine was isolated from coca leaves in the mid-1800s.

"It has only been during the last century, with the loss of traditional cultures in many parts of the world, the increasing availability of concentrated cocaine, and the advent of intravenous injection, that the drug has become a serious drug of abuse," said DuPont.

Cocaine: 1977 reports that the euphoric effects of cocaine, including hyperstimulation and feelings of great power and mental clarity, occur within minutes of use and can last up to 30 or 40 minutes. Physically, cocaine constricts blood vessels, stimulates the central nervous system, and acts as a local anesthetic.

Heavy use of cocaine, the report notes, can cause sleeplessness, anxiety, and sometimes paranoid delusions and hallucinations. Repeated snorting can destroy the mucous membranes in the lining of the nasal passages and cause a chronic and painful runny nose.
